CUTTING EDGE A passenger bus hangs precariously on the edge of the southbound flyover at Edsa and Ortigas Avenue in Mandaluyong City on Wednesday. The accident injured 10 passengers and triggered a massive traffic jam. A passenger told police investigators that the bus driver was speeding and text messaging at the same time, a sure-fire formula for accidents waiting to happen. (See story in Metro, Page A17.)

Massacre victim's widow flees PH

By TJ Burgonio

THE WIDOW of a journalist who was among the 57 people killed in the grisly 2009 Maguindanao massacre has fled to Hong Kong, saying the Philippine government had failed to provide her protection.

Speaking before journalists in Hong Kong more than a week ago, Myrna Reblando recounted her travails as the widow of slain Manila Bulletin reporter Alejandro "Bong" Reblando, and her family, "costly" search for justice.

S&P upgrades PH rating

Credit now just a notch below investment grade

By Michelle V. Remo

THE PHILIPPINES' image got a boost yesterday after Standard & Poor's (S&P) raised the country's credit rating by a notch, citing the government's declining debt burden and other favorable developments on the economic front.

S&P, one of the major international credit rating firms, raised the country's long-term foreign currency rating from BB to BB+, just one notch below investment grade.

Long-term foreign currency rating is one of the guides used by foreign investors in making investment decisions, such as whether or not to buy bonds sold by a government or do business in a country.

S&P assigned a "stable" outlook on the latest credit rating. This means the rating is likely to remain the same within about a year until a new review is done.

In a report released last night, S&P said its decision was based partly on the government's improving debt profile.

Over the years, the government has gradually been trimming its debt burden—the proportion of its outstanding debts to the country's gross domestic product (GDP)—through measures that improve tax and revenue collection.

The debt-to-GDP ratio, one of the key indicators closely monitored by credit rating firms, improved from 84 percent in 2004 to only about 50 percent to date.

"The foreign currency rating

Affection in dinner menu 'fit for queen'

By Michael Lim Ubac

THE STATE dinner hosted by President Aquino on Tuesday in honor of visiting Queen Sofia of Spain was, no doubt, fit for a queen.

The main course was certainly a gastronomic experience.

The guests either dined on a classic pairing of oven roasted sea bass, roasted eggplant and radish, potato polenta and saffron beurre blanc, or chose the braised eight hours beef cheek with celeriac mash, roasted shallot, black truffle and parmesan crisp.

The Shangri-La Hotel prepared the four-course meal at the invitation-only dinner with the Spanish royalty at the Rizal Ballroom in Malacañang.

The food, cultural entertainment and the thrill of dining with the reigning queen of a former colonial master left Budget Secretary Florencio "Butch" Abad craving for more.

When asked, following the banquet, if the food was "fit for a queen," the budget chief

PNP extends one-strike policy of cop chiefs to 3

By DJ Yap

THE PHILIPPINE National Police (PNP) has expanded its one-strike policy to include police commanders who fail to seize illegal logs and run after wanted criminals.

Until now, the policy punished erring police commanders only for failing to stop illegal gambling in areas under their jurisdiction.

Senior Supt. Generoso Cerbo Jr., PNP spokesperson, said yesterday that Director General Nicanor Bartolome had ordered the expansion of the policy at a recent command conference.

Cerbo quoted Bartolome as saying the expanded one-strike policy would reinforce the campaign against illegal logging and the hunt for fugitives.

Under the expanded policy, a police station commander will be relieved if another PNP unit confirms the existence of illegal gam-

Verzosa asks court to defer graft case

By TJ Burgonio

FORMER Philippine National Police (PNP) chief Jesus Verzosa has asked the Sandiganbayan to defer the issuance of a warrant and suspend proceedings against him in connection with a graft case over the PNP's purchase of two secondhand helicopters.

Verzosa, replying to the prosecutors' comment, argued that the proceedings against him in the Sandiganbayan should be suspended in view of a petition for a certiorari he filed in May and was now pending with the Supreme Court.

He reiterated that the anti-graft court should apply the "principle of judicial courtesy."

In the same reply, Verzosa also asked the Sandiganbayan to dismiss the case against him for lack of probable cause.

The Ombudsman in early June filed graft charges against former First Gentleman Jose Miguel Arroyo and 20 PNP officials, led by Verzosa, and Hilario de Vera, president of Manila Aerospace Products Trading (Maptra), a PNP supplier, over the sale of two helicopters.

Arroyo allegedly sold the two Raven 1 helicopters, passed off as brand-new, to the PNP. The two were among the five helicopters that Arroyo allegedly bought from an American firm for the use of his wife, then President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo, for her campaign in the 2004 presidential elections.

'Texting' bus driver sends vehicle flying into Ortigas flyover railings

By Nancy C. Carvajal

TEN PEOPLE ended up in the hospital yesterday afternoon after a passenger bus rammed the railings of the Ortigas flyover on the southbound lane of Edsa and teetered on the edge of the structure before its front came to a rest against a post and the underside of the Metro Rail Transit tracks.

The driver of the Don Mariano Bus blamed a motorcycle which he claimed suddenly appeared in front of his vehicle and forced him to swerve to the right.

His passengers, however, disputed this and said that he was texting on his cell phone just seconds before the accident occurred.

[illegible] of the Metropolitan Manila Development Authority (MMDA) said that of the 10 who were injured, eight were bus passengers. The remaining two were a motorcycle driver and an MMDA traffic constable who were standing under the flyover when the accident occurred.

Both were hit by pieces of the flyover railing which fell onto the road below. Some of the debris also fell on a Honda Civic, leaving the car damaged although its driver was unhurt.

According to [illegible], an [illegible] medic who was among the first to attend to the injured passengers, the bus driver identified as [illegible] was fiddling with his cell phone before the accident.

"All of the passengers were one in saying that the driver was texting before the bus

GAENG Phed Pet Yang, Yam Phad Bung Kawe

'Tord Man Gung', 'Yam Moo Yang Angun', 'Khao Soi'–not your typical Thai cuisine

By Erica Paredes
Contributor

LIKE ANY other Asian country where cuisine is highly dictated by region, and authenticity depends on which family it was passed down from, Thai food has also opened up to interpretation in recent years, especially now that it has become familiar fare, even in Western countries.

However, not all Thai restaurants are created equal. Dusit Thani Manila's Benjarong restaurant separates itself from the others by preparing Royal Thai Cuisine, wherein food is authentic, beautifully crafted and delicious.

There has been some argument on whether or not the Thai royals do eat food that's profoundly different from what the masses have. But there are significant differences in the way "royal" food is prepared.

First of all, Thai food is a harmony of five flavors—salty, sweet, bitter, sour and spicy. In preparing Royal Thai cuisine, it is imperative that the flavors are perfectly matched, so one does not overpower any of the others.

Also, in terms of preparation, Royal Thai cuisine ensures that all meat and fish contain no bones when served, and fruits are also pitted, peeled and cut into bite-sized pieces. In other words, food must be perfect both in looks and in taste.

Differentiation

So, while Royal Thai cuisine may not be "different" from what an average Thai might eat, it's the preparation and quality that differentiates it.

Benjarong's head chef, Patcharapon Nonsak, also known as Khun Yai, has been running the kitchen for nine years. Her last holiday was way back in 2006 when the restaurant underwent renovation. Her dedication and attention to detail ensure that the quality and taste of the dishes is the same every single time you visit.

> Preparation and quality are what define 'Royal' Thai fare

Benjarong offers a wide variety of starters, soups, salads, mains, noodles and desserts. Start with the Tord Man Gung or deep-fried shrimp cakes. It seems simple enough, but this version comes stuffed with shrimp and no cucumbers. It's crispy on the outside and perfectly juicy on the inside—good even without the sweet-chili sauce it is paired with.

Don't skip the Tom Kha Gai, a coconut and galangal-based chicken soup that will warm the tummy and make your palate happy. Many times I've had Tom Kha Gai and felt as if there was something missing, or I've had to ask for lime to add to my soup. This one, however, has the right amount of tanginess to offset the ginger and creamy coconut milk.

The crispy kangkong salad or Yam Phad Bung Kawe is a welcome alternative to the usual catfish salad. It has the usual green mango, onions, chili and coriander, but instead of crispy fish, you will find battered, fried kangkong leaves and
